

THE BARRE DAILY TIMES

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1911.

Published every week-day afternoon.
 Subscriptions: One year, $3.00; one month, 25 cents; single copy, 1 cent.

Entered at the post office at Barre as second-class matter.

Frank E. Langley, Publisher.

We wonder if Taft and Roosevelt will embrace the next time they meet. Yes, we wonder.

That national river and harbor estimate of $2,000 on the Burlington harbor doesn't comport with a quarter-million dollar hotel, but will fill a chink in the breakwater.

That "Homeseeker's Guide to Vermont Farms," prepared by Secretary of State Bailey and Commissioner of Agriculture Martin, ought to prove a beacon light into the promised land of opportunity. Only we need to let the benighted know there is such a volume.

First-day fatalities in the deer-hunting season seem to have a repressive effect. In both Vermont and Massachusetts, a man was killed on the opening day of the season, and there have been no deaths in either state since then. Pity that the hunters couldn't be more careful at the start!

Pictures of the new home of the New Hampshire State Historical society in Concord, which was dedicated yesterday through the munificence of Edward Tuck, lead one naturally to a day dream about how well a similar building would look as the home of the Vermont Historical society. If Vermont has an Edward Tuck, it is a fine time for him to step forward.

Probably New Hampshire wouldn't have remembered that November 23 was the 107th anniversary of the birth of its only president of the United States, Franklin Pierce, had not the Concord Monitor called attention to the fact, as well as to the fact that New Hampshire has no statue of President Pierce. New Hampshire is strangely forgetful about this man.

"Gross negligence" is charged against men who have been examined in relation to the flood horror at Austin, Pa., some weeks ago. Where have we heard that term before? If the prosecution goes no further than that, it will be like mauling one over the head with a feather pillow. "Gross negligence" is a very polite designation, not calculated to discourage one's peace of mind to an appreciable extent.

Some criticism is expressed throughout the state about the "states" of delegates to the next Republican national convention on the ground that it does not recognize the farmers of Vermont. We have noticed that some papers mention Theodore N. Vail. Can't he be called at least a "gentleman farmer"? Or do the farmers of Vermont want to send a man or two of their own? If so, it is up to them to say so when the time comes.

It must have been a real Seattle "boomer" who got the national grange to go there for its next convention. Still nothing is impossible; so the delegates from the far corners of the continent will probably be able to get out there. However, if the recent convention was seeking to accommodate the greatest number of its grange members, it would probably have chosen some city nearer the center of the agricultural interests of the country as a gathering place. It will next be in order for Portland, Me., to put in a bid for the national convention, and with considerable reason, too, because Maine is an agricultural state in large part.

The charge made by a Wisconsin football authority that college football is "honeycombed with corruption," meaning that star performers are "groomed" through preparatory school and into some particular college, so that they can reflect glory on the college, is calculated to make talk enough to fill the athletic hall, now that football is on its last legs. It is a subject which undoubtedly can be talked about at great length, and not all on one side, either, although it has been supposed that the college game of football was far more free from this kind of "corruption" than the college game of baseball.

THE SLAUGHTER OF DOES.
 In changing from a system which permitted the killing of does during the open season to a system which restricted the deer slaughter to animals having horns three inches long, there is necessarily a likelihood that the more narrow restrictions of the latter system should be overstepped for a time. Therefore, we may in this way account in part for the great slaughter of does throughout Vermont in the season which comes to a close to-morrow; for it is a possibility that the change in the law had not been universally known in the state, strange as that statement may seem in this day of numerous newspapers and improved means of communication. However, that reason does not account for the entire slaughter of does by any means; ignorance of the present law in most sections of the state is a silly reason to advance in extenuation of the offense because, in addition to the efforts of the newspapers to impress the fact of the law's change, the state fish and game department has done a great deal to enlighten the minds of prospective hunters on the point. Therefore, it seems likely that many of the offenses of doe-killing were due to wanton violation of the known law, that the offenders decided to take their chances on escaping detection. Against such as these, the prosecuting arm of the state should be energetically directed at once and persisted in until all wanton offenders have received their just deserts. It is perhaps the only way in which the realization of the change in the law can be driven home to stay. It is not a great crime to kill a doe; but it is contrary to the policy which the state has set up for the guidance of all individuals who come under the state's jurisdiction, and as such it requires enforcement.

A CANDID STATEMENT.

As between Allen M. Fletcher and Joseph A. DeBoer, the St. Johnsbury Caledonian considers the latter the better man for governor of Vermont, and it sets forth its reasons in Wednesday's issue after a manner which appears to be controlled by a spirit of fairness to both the candidates. After reviewing the manner of entry of the two avowed aspirants for the Republican nomination, the contemporary gives its impressions of the personality of the two men. The Caledonian gives Mr. DeBoer credit for courage of his convictions and persistence in urging the adoption of measures which seemed to him to be right, regardless of the effects on his political future. That same courage was "tempered by his skillful judgment," as the contemporary goes on.

Furthermore, allowing that both men are honorable in their methods, the Caledonian thinks that Mr. DeBoer represents the more progressive attitude, albeit requiring courage, of eliminating self-aggrandizement as much as possible and leaving the initiative more to the people themselves, although holding himself ready at any reasonable time to participate in the campaign and discuss the various matters of public concern.

In the point of personal ability, it classes both men in a high rank and has no doubt that either would acceptably administer the state government, "but," it concludes, "Mr. DeBoer has shown the greater courage in his legislative work and in his political methods has shown a greater degree of courage and progress."

And, finally, "Vermont's political life needs courage and progress and therefore it seems to us it can expect greater and better results from Mr. DeBoer than from Mr. Fletcher." At the same time the contemporary does not commit itself to the support of Mr. DeBoer, holding itself in position to make final selection after all the candidates are entered.

Coming as it does, therefore, from a newspaper which has carefully withheld its allegiance, and still does, the voluntary commendation of Mr. DeBoer carries not a small weight in the canvass, which is before the people of Vermont. Moreover, the statement may be interpreted possibly as an intimation that Lieut.-Gov. Slack of St. Johnsbury does not intend to enter the fight before the 1912 convention.

"Ashamed of Mother." With the scornful laugh of denial still on her lips, pretty Nettie Goodman saw her patient, loving old mother struck down by an automobile, and, forgetful of the false pride that a moment before had led her to deny to her fashionable escort that she knew the shabby, patient toiler, she threw herself upon the pavement beside the sufferer. It was a terrible awakening to her better self, but it won for her the love of the young man who had before found her only shallow and vain, a pretty little creature of pretense.

This powerful moral lesson forms the theme of "Her Awakening," a splendid product of the Biograph studios, which, with the Vitaphone, "The Prince and the Pauper," a bright, dazzling comedy, composes the Dreamland headlines to-day.

A Biograph and a Vitaphone on the same bill is a treat to picture lovers.
